Soft Glyphing

March 30 - April 14, 2026
solo exhibition at Vonk, Hasselt

The exhibition takes the form of a large-scale installation unfolding as an archaeological working and research environment: a fictional office in which a new writing system is investigated, documented, and presented. Visitors move through a constructed setting where archaeology, archival practice, and the logic of the “office” merge and overlap.

sandblasted glass, video on screen, tinted mdf, metal, pu-foam, bio plastic, acrylic

Installation view: Soft Glyphing at Vonk, Hasselt

The Gaze Flattening Team was one of five desks at the Soft Glyphing office. Visitors were invited to sit down and watch a video documenting the workings of this fictional department, dedicated to collecting and cataloguing gazes embedded in artifacts from the past.

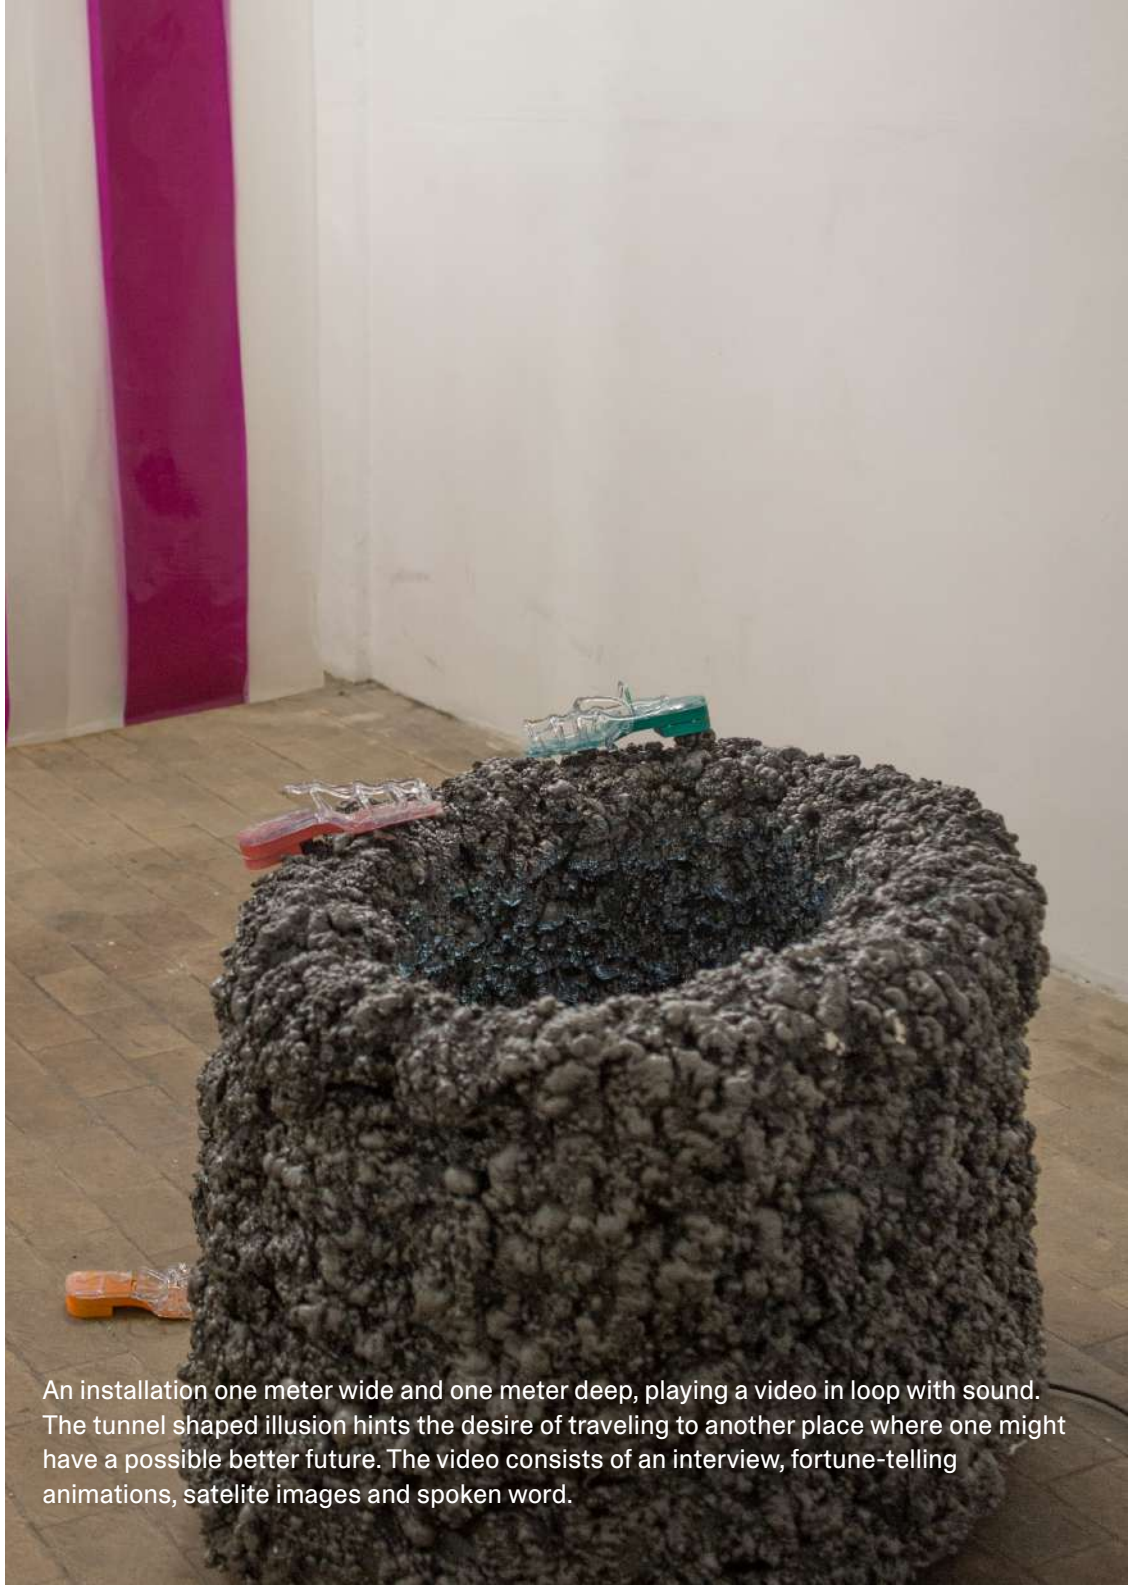
Installation view: Puddle Path, Sparewheel Brussels



An installation one meter wide and one meter deep, playing a video in loop with sound. The tunnel shaped illusion hints the desire of traveling to another place where one might have a possible better future. The video consists of an interview, fortune-telling animations, satelite images and spoken word.

Sandals are scattered throughout the space. Powered by a motor mechanism, they either flip or move their position at random moments. They refer to many South East Asian shoe traditions where the position of the shoe holds many meanings. For example, a shoe with the sole faced upwards foretells the owner being involved in a big argument in the near future. In this installation the sandals function as a fortune-telling object.
